As we get older the following changes are likely:

- reaction times get slower
- making decisions takes longer
- driving is more tiring and more stressful
- eyesight and hearing will deteriorate
- greater need for prescription medicine or drugs
- overall mobility decreases

These changes generally start from the midfifties and may not be particularly noticeable. They continue until they become very noticeable in a driver's seventies.

People can often assume they are better drivers than they actually are. So, it is important when these changes become recognisable that you should realise that your driving will be affected.

Most people should be able to carry on driving – more safely – by adapting their driving habits following the advice of a driving professional.
